

Get sick @ work?
Have an accident?
It'll never happen
2 me!

Unlock

Most teenagers think bad stuff only happens to other people

How do you talk to young adults about health and safety without them switching off? IOSH's new website can help. Wiseup2work is a free online resource offering you the right tools to grab and keep their attention.

Click on www.wiseup2work.co.uk to find jargon-free interactive exercises and games, a chat forum, lesson plans, worksheets, real life stories, case studies and more to help you bring health and safety alive for the young adults you're teaching or training.

And as part of Wiseup2work, we're running SpeakUp, a competition for 14 to 19-year-olds. We want teenagers to design an ad campaign around one of the most important lessons they need to learn – to ask about things at work that worry them. Winners will get the latest iPod packs, VIP work days and the chance to see their ideas turned into a real campaign.

www.wiseup2work.co.uk has been created by the Institution of Occupational Safety and Health and is sponsored by the Learning and Skills Council and supported by the National Youth Agency and British Chambers of Commerce

Leading learning and skills

www.wiseup2work.co.uk

IOSH, the chartered body for health and safety professionals, wants to get teenagers thinking about health and safety. Why?

In just five years, more than 50 under-18s lost their lives in UK workplaces, and nearly 13,000 were badly injured. Across Europe, young adults have 50 per cent more accidents than older workers.

European Week for Safety and Health at Work 2006 – dedicated to young people starting their working lives

Institution of Occupational Safety and Health

t +44 (0)116 257 3100, f +44 (0)116 257 3101, www.iosh.co.uk